LONG BEACH, Calif. — GetPRBoost has started press release distribution. Companies can file a finished release or send a brief for the desk to write. Approved copy can be published on a GetPRBoost newsroom page the same day it clears review, and is offered to the wire from the next business day.

"A press release that cannot clear a published standard should not reach a wire," a spokesperson for GetPRBoost said. "The desk and the guide exist so that the first item a partner pulls is a finished story, not a draft."

The company said the opening follows a period of building the order, review, and newsroom tools. Staff can now take a filing from draft to a public newsroom page without leaving the same desk. For more information, visit GetPRBoost .

There are two ways in. A client who already has copy can paste the release, attach an image or a short video, and send it for review. A client who has the news but not the draft can send a brief instead.

The desk writes from that brief and returns the copy for the client to accept or send back with notes. In both cases the same checklist runs before staff will mark the order ready.

Writers and clients can read the rules before they file. The press release guide states the word range, the three-link limit, the markup the wire keeps, and the claims the desk will not send. The same checks run when a release is submitted, so a rule that appears in the guide is the rule that can stop a filing.

A finished order is reviewed by staff before it is marked published. Publication creates the public newsroom page and, for a wire package, adds the item to the feed partners already have. The company said it will not invent prices, placements, or officer names on a release. A quote is attributed only to a named person the client has authorized, or it is carried as a spokesperson line.

Clients who want a price before they file can see the published pricing . Packages are listed there. This announcement does not quote a number that is not on that page.

GetPRBoost is operated by UPMAX INC in Long Beach. The newsroom is an owned archive on getprboost.com. Media questions go to the GetPRBoost media desk at support@getprboost.com or +1 (562) 548-7373.

The company said the first items on the wire will be its own announcement and then client copy that has already cleared the same desk. Reporters who want to see the newsroom can use the public pages on getprboost.com during posted business hours.
