SHERIDAN, WY - Furnirem, a family-led furniture brand that makes handcrafted wood pieces, has outlined its home office desk collection. The line includes six desks and a wood monitor stand designed for dedicated offices, bedroom corners and compact studios.

"We kept the same pairing of birch plywood tops and solid beech legs across the desks, so a buyer can choose a shape without changing the material," said Ahmet Dilber, head of design at Furnirem. "Each product page lists the sizes and finishes for that model."

The product pages state that no particleboard or MDF is used in the desks. The full range of home office desks can be compared on a single collection page.

The kidney desk is the most distinctive shape in the line. Its curved surface creates a working arc that keeps a laptop, monitor and notes within reach, and it comes in Walnut or Teak in three widths from 45.2 to 48.4 inches. A second version adds a drawer that sits flush within the kidney form.

For buyers who prefer straighter lines, the curved-edge desk softens only its short sides, while the rectangle desk keeps a clean geometric profile. Both include a flush drawer that keeps daily essentials off the work surface, and they are offered in widths from 39 inches up to 48 inches depending on the model.

The minimalist birch plywood desk takes the opposite approach to storage. It uses a 15mm birch plywood tabletop with every corner rounded and sanded, sits at a 30.5 inch working height, and is offered in four sizes and eight finishes, from natural and oak to black and white.

The collection also includes a rectangular solid pine desk with rounded edges in four sizes. A wood monitor stand made from birch plywood completes the line, available on its own or with holders for a laptop, phone and headphones plus a document shelf.

Several pieces share practical details aimed at home use. The desks carry a water-resistant matte finish that keeps the wood grain visible, and the legs on many models screw directly into pre-installed brackets, so they can be assembled without extra tools.

Furnirem is run by a second-generation woodworking family. Its brand story describes how the son of a master carpenter left an engineering career to rebuild the family craft around modern, minimalist designs, and the home office line reflects that pairing of traditional handwork with simple forms.

The home office collection is available on the Furnirem website, where each desk lists its dimensions, finish choices and construction details. Shoppers can compare widths, drawer options and finishes side by side before choosing the model that fits their room. Questions about sizes or delivery can be sent to the support team by email.
