November 26, 2025

The Newborn Care Solutions Agency (NCSA), the only newborn care placement agency founded by an internationally accredited training provider, announces expanded capacity to serve high-net-worth families seeking professional newborn care support across the United States. The Scottsdale-based agency reports increased demand for certified specialists as more executive families prioritize expert postpartum assistance.

The agency's unique education-to-placement pipeline, developed through years of training top specialists in the industry, enables families to secure vetted professionals typically within one week. NCSA maintains a network of thousands of trained specialists nationwide, many holding additional certifications as doulas and lactation consultants.

"The demand for qualified night nanny services has grown significantly among professional families who recognize the value of expert support during the critical early months," said Tonya Sakowicz of The Newborn Care Solutions Agency. "Our proprietary vetting process and CACHE International certification standards ensure families receive specialists who meet the highest professional benchmarks in the industry."

The expansion addresses a critical need among time-constrained executives, entrepreneurs, and professionals in major metropolitan areas including Phoenix, San Francisco, New York City, Dallas, and Chicago. These families increasingly seek overnight care options, with specialists providing 8 to 12-hour shifts or live-in arrangements tailored to each household's requirements.

NCSA's comprehensive screening process distinguishes the agency in an industry where verification standards vary widely. Beyond standard background checks conducted in compliance with local, state, and federal laws, the agency implements proprietary internal assessments that evaluate practical skills and professional competencies. This multi-layered approach provides families with confidence when welcoming a night nurse into their homes.

The agency's bespoke matching process considers each family's specific priorities, from sleep coaching preferences to feeding support approaches. Specialists receive ongoing training in evidence-based newborn care practices, ensuring they remain current with pediatric recommendations and safety protocols.

Family offices and wealth management advisors increasingly recommend NCSA's services to their clients, recognizing the agency's established reputation for discretion and professionalism. The agency's commitment to privacy protection includes strict protocols for handling sensitive client information throughout the candidate selection process.

As the only placement agency with an internationally recognized training foundation, NCSA maintains quality standards that exceed industry norms. Each newborn care specialist undergoes comprehensive education covering infant development, safe sleep practices, feeding techniques, and parent education strategies.
