FUQUAY-VARINA, NC - United Cabinet, a North Carolina kitchen and bath cabinet supplier, has published a guide that explains how to choose cabinet door styles. The article was posted on January 8, 2026, and updated on April 8, 2026. It compares Shaker doors with Linea, or European slab, designs and describes how framed and frameless construction differ.

“From classic elegance to modern simplicity, our cabinetry collections are designed to bring style, function, and lasting value to every project,” said Kamil Ilter, founder of United Cabinet. “From our location in Fuquay-Varina, North Carolina, we are dedicated to delivering cabinetry solutions that combine elegant design, dependable construction, and efficient service.”

The company supplies kitchen and bath cabinetry from a showroom and distribution center in Fuquay-Varina and works with dealers, contractors, builders, and homeowners. The full styles guide is available on the United Cabinet website.

European flat-panel cabinets, which the guide also calls Linea-style or frameless slab doors, have a smooth door face with no visible frame. The door fully overlays the cabinet opening, the article says, producing a continuous facade used in modern kitchens. A photograph on the company's frameless lineup shows a modern kitchen with blue-green slab doors and drawers, thin gold accent lines, a light wood breakfast bar, and a wood-paneled niche with built-in ovens.

According to the article, a Shaker door has a recessed flat center panel framed by four straight rails and stiles. The guide says this profile is used in farmhouse, transitional, and contemporary kitchens and can be paired with many countertop and hardware choices. White and gray Shaker doors are described as common in renovation work in the Southeast, including the Raleigh area.

The guide also distinguishes cabinet boxes by construction. A framed cabinet has a solid wood face frame on the front of the box, and the door is mounted to that frame. A frameless cabinet has no face frame; the door mounts to the box sides with concealed hinges and opens across the full width of the box. United Cabinet presents framed construction through its framed Shaker line and frameless construction through its Linea-style offerings.

Style selection, the article says, should follow the character of the house, the overall design language, the budget, and how the kitchen will be used. The guide describes Shaker doors as a flexible option when resale appeal is a factor, and it points to Linea slab doors for modern, open rooms with little ornament. Raised-panel and inset doors are covered for traditional or furniture-like settings, and the article notes that Shaker and flat-panel doors can be combined when colors and hardware stay consistent.

Dealers, contractors, and other customers can review samples through the company's contact page or at the Fuquay-Varina showroom, which is open Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. The contact page also describes a free design service in which a layout and cabinet plan are prepared from project details and measurements. United Cabinet ships nationwide from the North Carolina facility.
