NEWPORT BEACH, CA — September 3, 2026 — Vallier Custom Closets & Cabinetry, a Southern California design and millwork firm established in 1969, today announced an expansion of its Custom Closets and Custom Cabinets services, broadening the scope of architectural storage systems available to homeowners across Newport Beach, Laguna Beach, Irvine, and Palm Springs.

Vallier designs and builds walk-in and reach-in closets, custom cabinetry, and millwork systems that are integrated directly into a home's architecture rather than installed as freestanding furniture. The company's approach draws on European woodworking tradition, and each project begins with an in-home architectural consultation focused on circulation, light, proportion, and how a space is used day to day.

The expanded Custom Closets line includes both walk-in and reach-in configurations, with layouts developed around a client's wardrobe, storage needs, and the architectural character of the home. Custom Cabinets and millwork systems extend the same design approach to kitchens, home offices, pantries, laundry rooms, garages, children's spaces, and entryway or mudroom areas, with each system built to function as a permanent architectural element rather than an applied accessory.

According to the company, projects move through several stages after the initial consultation, including three-dimensional visualization, materials selection, and installation, with single-room systems typically completed within eight weeks and whole-home commissions ranging from twelve to twenty weeks depending on scope.

Materials and hardware are sourced from European manufacturers, and the company positions durability and long-term fit as central to its design philosophy, alongside the visual integration of each system into the surrounding architecture. Rather than offering standardized modular components, Vallier builds each closet, cabinet, or millwork system to the specific dimensions and design language of the home it serves.

For closets specifically, the design process accounts for wardrobe type, seasonal storage needs, and how a homeowner moves through the space each morning and evening. Walk-in systems can include island storage, dedicated jewelry or accessory drawers, and integrated lighting, while reach-in systems are designed to maximize function within a more compact footprint without feeling crowded or improvised.

Vallier's active practice is based in Southern California, with private consultations available across Newport Beach, Laguna Beach, Irvine, and Palm Springs. The company works by appointment rather than through a walk-in showroom, with new engagements typically beginning after a prospective client shares basic information about their space and timeline online.

The expansion of Custom Closets and Custom Cabinets services reflects continued demand among homeowners in these markets for storage systems designed as part of a home's architecture rather than added afterward. Vallier's design team works directly with each client from the initial consultation through final installation, with a single team responsible for design, materials selection, and on-site execution.

Homeowners interested in the expanded service offerings from Vallier Custom Closets & Cabinetry can request a private design consultation through the company's website to discuss project scope, timeline, and design direction for their home.
